My work these days is preserving our civilization's text on tempered glass tablets last for future historians thousands of years from now. I'm doing this through tw organizations.

The Ennigaldi Foundation is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit which decides what to preserve purchases tablets, and stores them in vaults. We are accepting donations if you w support this work.

Ammonite Inscription Company produces tablets for the Ennigaldi Foundation a for anyone else. When I started this project I thought I could just raise money an tablets from the tablet guys. But there were no tablet guys who I could find, so I l become the tablet guy.

It turns out these tablets also make great display pieces, so if you want a thousan inscription of your favorite poem or your wedding vows or a (black-and-white) ar or your family records or anything, then Ammonite can do that. Going forward I hope to sell to museums and others with an interest in long-term preservation, s can just make a simple transaction rather than set up a production process from scratch.

In the future I'll also offer "We make your tablets and store them in our permane vault" rather than just "I deliver the tablets to you" but that's a ways away.

My ultimate goal is to preserve the entire corpus of English-language Wikipedia
